3:07 a.m. last night I woke up to HORROR MOVIE SCREAMING! outside my window.

I got there just in time to see a little tabby cat driving a much larger black-and-white tuxedo cat off the fire escape and away from last night's chicken pan.

Her fire escape, her chicken pan. Don't you forget it, buster.

Angry Kitteh is back!

I'd given up the webcam a while ago, figuring she'd found a more trustworthy sucker. Just like a cat not to arrive until you'd given up on her. She cleaned the pan like a potscrubber dishwasher, growling at me the while. She had to stand in the pan to get the last bits. Then of course she had to lick her paws.

Yeah, I'm a little underslept this morning. I feel pretty okay with that.

Hurray for Angry Kitteh!

We are adjusting to New Kitteh. New Kitteh does not approve.

You must adjust and adjust, until New Kitteh deigns to declare you acceptable!

He has made this plain.

I hope he's not trying to get Chuck Norris in with a Delta Force unit or anything. If only because we have no room for anyone to do heroic martial arts in our place.

I think the usual arrangement is to lull you into a false sense of security, then get the dog on his side.

Yay Angry Kitten!

The toughest cat I ever fostered was a seven-pounds-if-soaking-wet calico, who could and would push around cats well more than twice her size. Because she said so. Size isn't everything.

How close were you able to get?

It's an encouraging sign that she growls at you. At least she acknowledges your presence, rather than doing her best to pretend you aren't there.

I was graciously permitted to stay inside no less than three feet from the window! (But the window was open a little.)

Definitely acknowledging my presence. Probably saying things like, "I remember you. You're the @#%*&$! who put me in the %$&* box and took me to that @&*%$#%!! place. I hate you. Keep the chicken coming."

Awwww. That's so sweet!

You're an evil, untrustworthy monkey, but you are her evil, untrustworthy monkey.

Hey, it's a major sign of respect when they think it's worth the bother to tell you how much they hate you.

Next thing you know she'll be approaching you just to confirm that her worst fears about you are true.

She may even run to see you when you get home, just to get the horrible treatment over with as soon as possible.

Maybe, possibly, one day, even allowing you to touch her, just to demonstrate that you have a poor sense of boundaries and will take all sorts of shocking liberties with an innocent cat.

But don't get any funny ideas, monkey.

Did he produce that one?

Aww, that's wonderful! She's claimed her territory and will only deal with it, and you, on her terms. As long as you show proper respect, you'll be acceptable!

One of the many, many reasons I love cats. They sure teach you your place!

Angry Kitteh is a generous kitteh who deigns to eat your meager offerings and growl at your unworthy self. Truly you are blessed.

She spoke to you! Okay, it was swear words and the kitteh version of "Don' make me cut you!" but she spoke.

(That she felt secure enough in her own kitteh badness to groom right there instead of bolting is a good sign.)

Maybe she just didn't want to leave a trail of chicken-scented pawprints leading to her secret source.

Have I mentioned lately how much you rock? This news makes me very happy.

Leave Angry Kitteh an extra piece of chicken for me, will you?
